HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, March 21.

COUNSEL were called to the bar, to be heard on the adjourned confideration of the appeal of the Earl of Hopetoun and the York Buildings Company, when, after hearing the appellant's counsel, the interlocutors complained of were affirmed.

The order of the day being then read, for their Lordships to be fummoned, Lord Ferrers rose up, and entered first up-on the chapter of packet-boats, and the great saving it would be to the public, if they were put under certain regulations and restrictions; that at present the packets to and from Lisbon (many of which are 200 toos burthen) are well known to carry on fauggling in fo large a way, as not only to injure the fair trade, but grants affect the public revenue. This Lord-thip entered next upon the fecond chapter, and which he read from a printed copy; the subject of which was the registering of 40,000 feamen, always to be ready at a very short notice to man our ships of war in case of a sudden rupture. As foon as his Lordship had read the plan, and which is the same as has been lately handed about, he concluded with moving, "that an humble address be presented to his Majesty, humbly to defire his Majerty will be graciously pleased to order the proper officer to lay before this House a list of all the packet-boats, with the number of officers and men on board each, and the expences attending the fame, &c." and then fat down.

Lord Tankerville faid a few words upon the full part of the rection which respected the packet-boats; after which the mo-heing put, it passed in the negative without a division.

A bill for repairing Perth roads was presented, and read a

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 21.

THIS day, Mr Phillips, Chairman of the Seaford election Committee, made the following report to the House,

1st, That the Right Hon. Henry Viscount Neville is not

2d, That the Hon. Sir Peter Parker, Knt. is not duly c-lected. The faid determination was ordered to be entered on the Journals of the House.

A new writ for the election of two Barons for Scaford was then moved and ordered.

Mr Mitford presented a table of rates of Customs and Excife duties in Scotland.

Mr Drummond and Mr Roe, two of the Commissioners of Petitions from Newcaltle, Named, Till, and Lyme, relative to a reform randament, were prefented; the same were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House having resolved itself into a committee on the importation and exportation of corn and grain,

Mr Alderman Newhbam, after mentioning the hardfhips which many parts of the country suffered from the irrefficacy of the prefent laws and regulations relative to the importation and ration of grain, moved for leave to bring in a bill for the purpole of amending and extending those that now substituMr Duncombe moved for leave to bring in a bill for the more effectually regulating the mode of electing knights of the shire for the county of York. These regulations he stated as not meant to be general, but as adapted to the particular neceffities of that county. Leave was granted.

The Lord Advicate of Scotland prefented a petition from a numerous body of the weavers of Glafgow. This petition, he faid, was not from the operative weavers but from a fet of men full as refpe table. It complained of the taxes imposed on cotton and mullin, and prayed relief. The petition was then brought up, and referred to a Committee.

Sir John Wrotelley presented a petition from the manufacturers of Wolverhampton against the intended commercial system with Ireland.

Mr Crugar brought up a petition of a fimilar nature from the merchants of Briftol. He mentioned that the alarm of the Irish commercial fystem was so extensive among his constituents, that 99 out of 100 thought they would be perfectly ruinous to this country. This, and the other petition, were referred to the confideration of the Committe on Irish affairs.

Mr Smith presented a petition from the Manufacturers of Nottingham, praying to be heard by counsel against the regulations intended to be adopted with respect to Ireland. presenting this petition, he begged leave to declare his senti-ments as to the slavish doctrine of voting according to the commands of constituents, a doctrine which he reprobated, as deregatory to the honour and dignity of every member of that House. In the present instance, his constituents had directed him to oppose the Irish resolutions in 1010. As to how he would vote, he declared, he should be influenced by the arguments he should hear when the business came to be finally difcuffed. At present he did not fee, that the manufacturers of Nottingham would be at all injured by the regulation about to be adopted, and till evidence was produced to the contrary, he did not think he should change his opinion.

Mr Fox faid, he was not at all convinced from what had fallen from the Hon, Gentleman, that the manufacturers of Nottingham would not fuffer by the commercial fuftem with Ireland; on the contrary, be was of opinion, that they would be very materially injured, not only in the importation of Irish goods, but also by the importation of foreign goods, under the name of Irish.

Mr Pitt begged to inform the Hon. Gentleman (Mr Fox) that the duty to be laid on stockings would almost amount to Mr Fox faid, if the duty was to be ten thousand per cent. he should not alter his opinion as to the injury the manufacturers of Nortingham would fustain.

Mr Pitt faid, he supposed that a total prohibition would not tend to alter the Hon. Gentleman's opinion, if it could not be done by a duty of ten thousand per cent.

Lord North, on the other hand, contended, that there was a great difference between the actual prohibition of any commodity, and the subjecting it to high duties, amounting to a prohibition; the latter was opening a door to fininggling, which a total prohibition would thut. He was, therefore, of opinion, that his Hon. friend was right in what he had afferted.

Mr Pitt replied, that this was a subject which would hereafter come under the confideration of the House. The converfation ending here, and feveral members having applied for leave to go out of town in various pretences,

Mr Pitt role and faid, that though he was by no means difposed to put any Gentleman to inconveniency; yet such was the urgency of public busness at present, that he must oppose the motions now made, as, in his opinion, they ought not to pass. Unless Gentlemen, therefore, could assign some strong reason for their requests, he thought the House at this time ought not to grant them. On this account he should move, Thurfday."

A thort convertation here enfued, in which Mr Powys, Mr Pitt, Sir William Cuoyaghame, and other members, joined; after which the motion was put, and the House divided, when there appeared,

Ayes, A I - 33

Majority, —55
Mr Eden then observed, that us, besides the call of the House, the ballot for the County of Backingham was to come on the next day, and as the important business of the Parliamentary Reform was fixed for Wednesday, he thought the further confideration of the Irish business after that day ought to be deferred till after the Easter recess.

Mr Pitt faid, that as very little progress could be made in it on Thursday, and as he likewife had evidence which he wished to be examined previous to its final discussion, he had no object. tion that the further confideration of the business should be put

The order of the day was read for the House to be put into a Committee this day on the Irish trade propositions. The fame was upon motion ordered to be discharged, and the Com-

M. P. M. P. Thurfday the 31st instant. Mr Pigott and Mr Gartow were defired to come to the bar, when the former of these gentlemen, in a short speech, opened the case he meant to substantiate, and called Mr Walker as a witness in support of it. Mr Walker underwent a long examination, in the course of which he was led to an explanation of his evidence as it appears in the printed report before the Committee of Privy Council. This part of his examination was extremely curious and interesting; but, having extended his evidence very confiderably, a few minutes before eleven Mr Fox tofe, and observed, than the Committee must fee the utter impossibility of their being able to go through the examination of all the witnesses to be called in support of the petition, that night, or even to finish that of the witness at the bar, whose evidence had been diverted a good deal from the main object of his having been called upon to give the House his testimony. He submitted it, therefore, to the judyment of the bleed; and had already been five hours at the bar, it would not be adviscable to break off where they were, and adjourn any farther examination till the next day. Mr Fox added, that when he fuggested this, he did not mean to press it upon the Committee, unless Gentlemen in general approved of it; but as he held the House to stand pretty considerably pledged, by their votes of Friday, to meet the next day and make a ballot, he thought it would rather prove an advantage than not for them to adjourn then, and refume the examination after the ballot to-morrow.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer observed, that there were two oints in the Rt. Hon. Gendeman's speech. 1st, The little probability that there was to, be able to go through the whole of the examination that would be necessary that evening. 'To that proposition he was ready to accede, and therefore willing to confent to adjourn, because undoubtedly it would be impossible for them to go through the whole of the examination, and because he had many new heads of evidence to state, and fresh witnesses to call to prove them, before the Committee could be ripe to come to any decifive vote upon the fubject. With regard to the fecond point, viz. the advantage of a fjourning then, in order to fecure a ballot the next day, that was an elential confideration indeed, and a reason that weighed very forcibly on his mind. To obtain a ballot the next day was exceedingly defireable, and what he by all means wished. He was therefore willing to confent to adjourn; but he must beg the Committee to hold it in mind, that it was expected they would exert themselves, and do their utmost to make a ballot the next day, in order that the call might take place, and the Committee be afterwards refumed. He urged this very firenuoully, as he observed there stood a very important business that would necessarily lead to considerable discussion, and take up a pretty deal of time on the day after the next day. He concluded with moving, that the Chairman alk leave to fit again the next day.

The Committee was accordingly adjourned, and the House being refumed, rose immediately.

From the Landon Papers, March 22.

LONDON. By intelligence from the Hagae, which arrived this day, we hear, the States General having, on the 9th inflant, collected the votes of the Seven Provinces, have fent an ultimate answer to the demands of the Emperor, of which they have unanimoufly declared their refusal, as deragotory to the honour of the States as an independent fovereignity. Copies of the fame are given to all the foreign ministers resident here, and sent to the feveral Courts, with whom the States are in alliance, &c.

We hear from Oftend, that placarts are arrived there from Brussels, which are putting up in all the principal parts of Austrian Flanders, instructing the magniferates to take into custody all idlers, and such persons as cannot give a good account of themselves, and to commit them to the common goal, where it is to be proposed to them to enlish in the Emperor's army; on refusal of which they are to be proceeded against as spies.

A gentleman who arrived from France last Friday fays, that he vifited Toulon, Breft, Namz, Bourdeaux, and Rochelle, at all which ports they are very buly in the dock-yards, building and repairing ships as if they were upon the eve of a war.

He also says, that at those ports he met with many Americans, who declared their intention, that if the Dutch Went to war. they would enter into their forvice either by fea or fand.

Dr Farmer, Librarian of Cambridge, who is delegated by that University, to attend to their interests, which are so imminently threatened by the new fystem, has had a conference with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in which he was informed exactly as the manufacturers were severally told before, that a provision would be made for the security of the literary privileges of the Univertities; and at the same time, the Minifter informed the Doctor, that it was his wish to give the most complete fecurity to literary property in general; and the book-fellers should have the opportunity to draw their own clause, and to fuggest what measures it would be necessary to adopt, to prevent the evils with which their trade was menaced by the new fyftem.

We are affured, that Mr Macklin has made the most advantageous engagement for his fummer's expedition to Ircland, ever known in theatrical history. The manager has agreed to pay this lively veteran forty pounds per night for ten nights.

EDINBURGH. Extract of a letter from London, March 22. HOUSE or LORDS.

" In the House of Lords, the Earl of Effinghum, their Lordships having been summoned on the occasion, moved for leave to bring in a bill for the relief of Infoluent Debtori, fimilar to that moved by his Lordhip last year. After a short conversation thereon, and the Lord Chancelles throwing out that he would have no objection to the bill, provided it was fo me-dified as to prevent the fraudulent debtor from being relieved, the noble Lord agreed to decline preventing the bill, which his Lordship had printed in his hand, with a view of offering one agreeable to the learned Lord's ideas, immediately after the enfuing recess.

"The fecond reading was then moved by Lord Sidney, of the bill for appointing Commissioners to enquire into the fees of public officers.

" Lord Loughborough was pointedly against the principle of the bill, being of opinion, that the head of every office was, and would be found competent to decide upon the abuses in it, and to remove the same. The learned Lord also thought, that the powers given this new commission were too great and ex-tensive for any body of men to have. His Lordship approved of the appointment of the Commissioners of Accounts, and thought they had rendered the public much fervice; but denied that there was any comparison between that and the commission under their Lordships consideration. The one was anin question, had powers given them of so vast an extent, that they were under no fort of controul. They were to make their report to the Treasury; and hence the learned Lord drew their Lordships attention to a new and dangerous species of influence; for as the B and of Treasury was under no controul, they would be left perfectly at liberty to remove any abuse, or wink at it, just as the officer committing it might or might not prove a friend or favourite. His Lordship observed, that by an act of William III. all public officers took an oath. that they would not take any other fees than the mere fees of office; and, by the new commission, the very pow-er given by it to the Commissioners, was to examine those officers upon oath, whether they had taken exorbitant fees or not, by which they might, by aniwering the question, be drawn into a direct crimination of themselves, as it was not to be supposed, that there were any public officers who did not take more than the established sees of office, At least, his Lordship thought it unfair, and highly improper, that such a question should be put to public officers to be anfwered upon oath. The learned Lord here took occasion to remark, that in no country were fewer abuses practifed in pu-blic offices, fince, however frequent the changes in administration might be, and they were, every one knew, pretty frequent, it was never known that officers of a fubordinate degree, were ever difmiffed. The learned Lord again took notice of the fovereign powers given the new Commissioners, which were comhe faid, to the fummoning before them a Secretary of State, and he wished to know how the noble Lord (Lord Sydney) would feel himfelf, should they fummon any officer or clerk under him, as to any abuse pretended to have been committed. For his part, he should be not a little hurt on fuch an occasion; and from what he knew of the Commissioners, he should think a Secretary of State as well qualified as they were, to examine into any abuse of the officer he presided over. The noble Lord also stated the First Lord of the Admiralty, as equally subject to their power, and enlarged much upon these heads with great strength of argument. he knew not where there power might lead to. It was true it might be ended by death, but that the King could appoint others in the room of those that might die; and another thing he could not but impress strongly on their Lordships minds was, that no redress could be had by an individual they might injure. The learned Lord also stated the commission as a goneral centure of office, and a strong implication of a general breach of public confidence. His Lordship also mentioned the names of Sir John Dick, Mr Mollison, and Mr Baring, as the three Commissioners, and thought that, however great their abilities might be, they could not be fo well qualified to trace the abuse of an office, as the head of it, as they had not only to learn what the abuse was, but also how to find it out. He instanced Sir John Dick and Mr Mollison as Comptrollers of the Army, and thought that sufficient employment fully for them, as the Commissioners of Accompts had found the army extraordinaries too much for them, and had therefore referred them to the Comptrollers. The noble Lord observed, that persons most at leisure ought to be appointed when the bill came before a Committe, in which stage his Lordship threatened it with his further opposition, as feveral of the clauses stood in need of very material attention.

Lord Sidney observed, that the clauses might undergo the necessary attentions when the bill should come before a Committee, and if any noble Lord would mention any name more fit to be him to tendenc bufe of nexed t Gon hav veyed a offices. no-mor offices.

The Duke of Manchester approved of the principle of the bill, but disliked two clauses, one of which went to the calling for all books and papers, and the other to authorise the Commissioners to enjoin and require the Sheriss, &c. to be aiding and assisting them in bringing all persons before them.

"The Lord Chancellor having quitted the Woolsack, observed, that as the principle of the bill seemed to have their Lordhips approbation, the clauses might be so modified as to meet the ideas of those that opposed them. In answer to the meet the ideas of those that opposed them. In answer to the learned Lord, with respect to compelling persons to take an oath, they had the same redress as was in the case of bankrupts, who were notfobliged to answer interrogatories upon oath tocriminate themselves, and who, if committed in that case for comempt, might have their bibbess, and bring their action; so that the common law, as it stood, was all that would be required. In answer to the noble Duke, as to the enjoining the Sheriffs, &c. his Lordship faid, it meant nothing more than the mere form. They were to serve the parties with notice of attendance, and if they resuled it, there was an end of the matter. The learned Lord then went into a general desence of the bill, which he stated as highly necessary, the public offiof the bill, which he flated as highly necessary, the public offiof the bill, which he stated as highly necessary, the public offices having from fees got to graduites, and into a variety of other abuses, which called loudly for reform.

"The Duke of Manchester was not fatisfied with the learned Lord's explanation, and read the two objectionable clauses, and wished to know, if the Sheriss, &c. would, or would not,
have power to seize upon a man's papers and person?

"No reply was given.
"Viscount Streams went partly over the form

"Viscount Stormont went partly over the same ground as the Noble Lord (Loughborough) and pronounced the bill replete with inquisitorial powers never before known in this country, while the business meant to be done by the Commissioners might be much better executed by the heads of the offices where abuses might be found.

"The bill was then read a fecond time, and committed for the first Thursday after the recess; and the House adjourned." HOUSE or COMMONS.

" As foon as the Speaker took the chair to-day, the Sericant at Arms was fent round to the different committee rooms, in fearch of members; but notwithstanding one hundred and fifty were collected together, not one hundred could be found qualified to proceed to ballot for a committee for trying the controverted election for the County of Bucks. Died at Eddertown, on the 16th March, after a tedious illness, the Rev. Mr Joseph Munro, minister of that parish, in the 71st year of his age, and 43d of his ministry. His relations and friends at a distance will please accept of this notification of his decease.

On Wednesday the 23d instant, at a meeting of the Royal College of Physicians here, Doctor William Farquharson, hylician in Pailley, was unanimoufly admitted a licentiate. Thursday, the Magistrates had under their consideration a omplaint at the inftance of the undertaker for the public lamps of this city, and the Procurator-Fife al, against a military gen-tleman, for breaking and destroying one of the public lamps on the Bridge. For this deliberate, wanton attack, and insult aginst the police, he was fined in five guineas.

We are forry to mention, that, notwithstanding the several vell-timed and well written strictures, which lately appeared in this paper, animadverting on the impropriery of conduct of a certain set of gentlemen, they still incline to draw upon themelves the attention of the public. On Thursday night, some of these would-be-thought sine gentlemen chose to exhibit themselves in the Theatre-Royal in characters very unlike those which they wished to assume. Having got themselves much intoxicated, they rambled into the Theatre between the play and sarce, and, after knocking down, and otherwise maltreating the box-keepers, and other fervants belonging to the house, gainst the police, he was fined in five guineas. og the box-keepers, and other fervants belonging to the house, hought proper, likewife, to infult the audience with most oppositions language. —It will, however, be some consolation to be frequences of this most rational of all amusements to be showed, that the culprits in this scene of riot and disorder will be a supported by the property of the p trall well known, and stand a fair chance of being punished cording to their deserts. Last night, three of them were samined before the Magistrates, when the Lord Provost atnded in person. On Monday, it is proposed to examine the her gentlemen concerned; after which, if they do not subit themselves to the Magi trates, a proof will be led again't em, when, we have no doubt, such penalties will be instictas to deter them and their bon-companions from committing ch outrages in future.

people, and which, it is hoped, will be the means of introducing that valuable and important branch of manufacture into this part of the country. The beautiful and pleafant village of Gatchouse is admirably situated for this or any other branch of manufacture, from its vicinity to the fea, with which it communicates by the river and bay of Flest, from the great road betwixt Carlisle and Portpatrick passing through it, and from the great plenty and cheapness of provisions in the neighbourthood. The fituation of this place is nearly in the center of that district, which reaches from the head of the Solway Frith to the town of Ayr, comprehending an extent of near 200 to the town of Ayr, comprehending an extent of near 200 miles, in which Mr Knox very justly observes, that there is not at present a single branch of manusacture established. From this, and other erections of the same kind now going on, it is hoped that we may foon expect to fee the cotton manufacture firmly established in Scotland. We congratulate this country on the acquisition of the Mess. Birtwhistles, who have both the fpirit and abilities to introduce new branches of manufacture into it; and we fincerely hope their example will be followed by others. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on Mr Mur-ray's zeal and patriotism, to have this important branch of manufacture fixed upon his estate: And much more might be faid upon this subject, were not that Gentleman's public spirit universally known, whose house, gardens, policies, and extensive improvations, are the ornament and pride of the south of

On Wednesday last, at mid-day, a fire broke out in a very elegant house in Falkirk, not yet finished, belonging to Mr James Walker there, which was entirely consumed. Happily the premisses were insured in the Sun Fire Office last week.

Much praise is due to the Magistrates and neighbours, particularly to Charles Gascoigne, Esq. who fent the fire-engine from Carron, alongst with a number of hands, to extinguish the flames; by whose activity and exertions the fire was prevented from spreading farther. It is supposed to have arisen from a fire of wood, for the use of the wrights employed in finishing the house. the houfe.

In our modern milk-and-water productions, (fuch as Braganza) we in vain expect to find that genius, or to be moved with those feelings, which are excited by the tragic scenes of Shakespeare, Lillo, Rowe, or Otway. Mrs Yares made the most of her character on Thursday night. This veteran of the stage still retains very vigorous powers. She was received with great applause by a very brilliant and crowded audience.— Mr Woods, who seems to receive fresh animation from the accession of every capital performer, played the part of Velaquez inimitably well.
